A WILD MAN KILLED.

The "Terror" of the Camas Prairie Shot Down.

The celebrated wild man of the Camas prairie was killed recently by some parties traveling through the prairie. While the travelers were camped in the foot-hills, on the edge of the prairie, one of them named Micklehany went a few hundred yards from camp to find some ducks, taking with him a shotgun loaded with large shot. When only a couple of hundred yards from camp the "Wild Man of Camas" jumped up from his hiding place, and after running a short distance stopped and looked at Micklehany through his large, clear eyes for a moment, then, with a shriek that struck terror to the hunter and caused him to shudder as the echo sounded through the forest, the man, with the ferocity of a savage beast of the jungle, made for Micklehany so fiercely that in order to insure his own safety he emptied both barrels of the gun into him, when he fell apparently dead. Micklehany went to him, when the strange being began to revive and he put his foot on the man's neck and called to his comrades to bring an ax, which they did with all possible haste. The man escaped just as they arrived and with a loud moan regained his feet and started to run. The ax was thrown at him, and as he turned his head to look back it struck him in the centre of the forehead and he dropped lifeless to the ground.

On examination he was found to be rather tall, with full, clear eyes and an extraordinary large head; appeared to be about 45 years of age, although not a gray hair could be seen. The wavy black hair of his head hung low down onto his body and his bushy beard was about two and a half feet long. The body was also covered with a thick growth of hair about two inches in length. This was also black and very fine. The finger and toe nails were about two inches long and resembled claws more than nails. He was wrapped in a long robe made of rabbit skins, which, although the tailoring on it was not a subject of admiration, was well suited for the most bitter cold weather. The skins were sewed together by sinews. On examination of the place from which he made his appearance it was found that he had a very comfortable bed, which was made of the soft bark of sagebrush. It was under an overhanging rock and well protected from the wind. Near the bed were two rabbits, which had most likely been killed by stones.

About ten years ago an insane stage-driver left Boise City and has never since been heard of. The "Wild Man of Camas" may be the same, having taken up his abode in the then desolate prairie, but seldom visited by men. He could very easily secure food there, as the country is filled with rabbits both winter and summer, which can be easily killed by an expert at throwing stones. The "Wild Man of Camas" has, since first seen in 1873, been dreaded by the lonely traveler and prospector, who will be relieved to know that he is dead. —Bellevue (I. T.) Sun.

Mother Goose Ball.

There must have been some 600 persons at the Mother Goose ball given at the Walker Opera House on Thursday afternoon. It is true that a great many were spectators, and a majority of those who danced were not in costume; but it was a Mother Goose ball for all that. Many of the little ones looked sweeter than words can describe, as the trotted and danced over the floor in their attractive costumes. The affair was a wonderfully pleasant one in every way, and was a decided success financially.

And leaves the teeth as white as snow.

The Rape Case.

The hearing in the case of J. E. Anderson, charged with rape, did not come up before Justice Spiers on Thursday, the Roach-Donnelly case being under examination. It will, however, be heard at 10 a.m. today. The case is assuming a queer phase. When the arrest of Anderson was made it was understood that the girl and her parents were opposed to the affair becoming public, and that she only made reluctant admissions. The day following she denied that Anderson had actually accomplished his design, though she had personally declared he had done so, and said she screamed from pain and terror. On Thursday, after a still more careful inquiry by the police into the matter, the girl not only declares he did not accomplish the rape, but states he never made any forcible attempt. She says he gave her money, took liberties with her, and exposed his person to her, and invited her to go with him, but that was all. The result is instead of examining him on a charge of rape, the hearing will come up under the ordinance on a charge of exposing his person. The case is in a very unsatisfactory condition. It is impossible to believe a girl so young would deliberately lie in her first statement, and as impossible to think that she would make such a piece meal retraction. Either she is an unmitigated fibber and should be punished, or the poor girl has been "coached" and instructed what to say. The proceedings to-day may throw some light on the matter; but in the event that it does not, there is little doubt as to public opinion on the question: has the girl been approached, or can one so young be such a consummate liar?

The Clay Pigeon.

The much talked of clay pigeon was the subject of animated conversation yesterday. Mr. Newman had one on exhibition in his place of business; some took it for a soup dipper, and some for a church contribution box, but all were mistaken; it was a full fledged clay pigeon; patented by Geo. Ligowsky, of Cincinnati, Ohio, and, strange to say, he is not a candidate for president. A description of this inanimate bird may not be out of place here. It consists of a semi-globe of clay, colored brown, very thin, so that a single shot—that is one out of a load of bird shot—will shatter it to pieces, after it has been sprung from the trap made for the purpose, the wind entering the concave keeps it in motion, and together with the piece of pasteboard attached to it, keeps in such a position that the shooter has a chance of hitting it. It is an improvement in the way of humanity, but terrible hard on the wing shooters who are used to eat pigeon pie after a match.

The Late C. E. Erzgraber.

The San Francisco Examiner has the following in its Tuesday issue on C. E. Erzgraber, the gentleman who died in Ogden last Saturday, from an overdose of opium: The attorney of C. E. Erzgraber, the San Francisco who died last week on the eastbound train, from an overdose of chloral hydrate, states that the statement of suicide cannot be true. Deceased had been for a long period accustomed to the use of the drug for insomnia, and had a fear that he might die suddenly. His estate, valued at $10,000, was left by will to the German Benevolent Society and Protestant Orphan Asylum. The will was dated February 26, 1883, and, as by law, bequests of this kind must be made thirty days prior to testator's death, an endeavor will be made to have the estate turned over to the mother of the deceased, who is in Germany.

A Serious Case.

On Thursday, the physicians connected with the Deseret Hospital were called upon to examine a serious case, that of a young woman named Mrs. May, who lives in one of the southern settlements. Her sight is badly affected and her hearing is superinduced by some affection of the brain. The examination was careful, and resulted in the belief of the physicians that the case was one that could be cured, though it was certainly serious and aggravated.

"Duel in the Snow."

This evening the Walker Opera House Company will present a piece called "Duel in the Snow." The company have rehearsed quite actively, and promise to give a delightful and interesting performance. Manager Curran is certainly affording the public variety enough in the dramatic line; and he must be a fastidious individual, indeed, who cannot enjoy most of his plays. A large ballet of boys will appear in "Aladdin, The Wonderful Scamp," at the matinee on next Saturday. Mr. Theodore, stage manager of the Walker Opera House, has had them under training for some time, but owing to a lack of time for proper preparation, "Aladdin" will not be presented to-night, as previously announced; instead, however, a laughable farce will conclude the performance.

INDIANA.

A Succinct History; Its People, Morals, and the Country Generally.

JOHNSONVILLE, March 4, 1883.

Editors Herald:

If I had the money, I could buy you a history of Indiana cheaper than I can write it; but not having the chink, I will write what I can. First I will give you an essay on the people, of which there are a good many kinds; some are very black, with thick lips, big feet and very curly hair or wool. They are generally very polite to strangers; are mostly used for waiters in hotels, for boot blacks, hostlers and barbers. There is a great difference between what they know and what they think they know. They are fond of being petted and yet very tame when handled. There is another class usually called fast girls; they generally inhabit towns and cities, and are rather rowdy, as they generally come out and parade the streets after sundown until late in the night. They sometimes insult strangers; I could not describe their appearance; some are white, some black and some yellow, and all are very green. There is another class called Young America; they are generally born young and weaned soon after. They chew and spit, smoke and swear, drink and loaf. They don't do much, don't have much, and don't know much. They are usually found around country drug stores and postoffices. You can tell when they are out by the odor of the atmosphere and puddles of walnut stain on the floors, stove hearths and coal scuttles. They vary in size from two feet high to six feet four inches; they vary in color from a tallowy hue to a chestnut sorrel. Some are long and gaunt, some short and wide out in front; most of them are hump backed and hollow chested. Then there are farmers, merchants, tailors and tinkers, artists and shoeblacks, architects and chimney sweeps, carpenters and pickpockets, blacksmiths and lawyers, doctors and clergymen, thieves, cutthroats and vagabonds, and once in a while an honest man. The country is rather flat—farms and timber large. Groves of hickory, oak, ash, walnut, elm and poplar, sumac, sassafras, hazel, and many other kinds too numerous to mention. They raise mostly corn and wheat. Corn grows sometimes ten or twelve feet high. They raise a great many kinds of fruit: apples, pears, peaches, plums, cherries, gooseberries, currants, grapes, raspberries, hen fruit and goose eggs. They raise lots of hogs, a few sheep, some cattle, quite a number of blooded horses and some that are not. Sometimes they raise h—l in general. It rains hard, freezes hard and gets awful hot in the summer. The winds howl, sheep, lambs, hens, cows, birds whistle, and so do some of the girls. For game they have cotton tail rabbits, coons, quails and seven up.

Married.

SALT LAKE CITY, March 15, '82.

Editors Herald:

One more bachelor defunct. On Thursday morning Mr. Aaron Young, of Mill Creek, Salt Lake County, was seen driving his team toward the city, with a fair young lady in the spring seat close beside him. On inquiry we were told that they were going to get married; and so it happened, President D. H. Wells performing the ceremony. In the evening they held their wedding reception and a grand supper. Many of the friends of Mr. Aaron Young and Mrs. Margaret Roberts Young met at the residence of Geo. B. Bailey, brother-in-law to the deceased bachelor, and congratulated him on his escape and his emigration into the new matrimonial state.
